Russian troops deployed no-Karabakh four years ago, task was clear: Keep the peace between bitter foes Armenia and Azerbaijan and prevent another war in the volatile region.
But as Azerbaijan forces swept through mountainous Karabakh last September and crushed Armenian separatist forces in a matter of hours, the Russian mission looked lost.
The Kremlin last week quietly confirmed that the peacekeepers were withdrawing, taking with them their weapons and hardware, as well as Russian troops from a region it long backward.
